

Voice of SecOps

In its first annual report, Deep Instinct set out to explore key current threat concerns and how they are impacting the cybersecurity community and those on the front lines. This global report also evaluates where the priorities need to be placed to develop a future-proof solution moving forward.

10 out of 39 hours in a working week are spent handling false positives.

25%

Security professionals could win back 25% of their time by eliminating false positives.

90%

of respondents claim that false positives contribute towards low staff morale.

78% of UK security professionals are worried that sophisticated cyber adversaries will use AI to cause a global incident in the next 12 month.

of UK security professionals believe it should be illegal to pay ransoms to cyber criminals

11%
disagree

23%
don't know

The Hayhurst Consultancy conducted research among 600 cybersecurity professionals across North America and key western European countries, including CISOs, CTOs, Global Cybersecurity leads, and Infosec analysts across a range of key verticals such as technology, financial services, healthcare, telecoms, and manufacturing.

To learn more, visit:

